

EVOKE

A R T E D I T I O N

CONNECTION
THROUGH ART

Exploring
THE ARTS

Creative Connections

How one company was able to use pottery to connect with the public after the COVID-19 pandemic seperation

Jordan Tyler - Photographer

LIFESTYLE

LIMITED EDITION

ART

Creative Opportunities

Bringing Pottery To The Public

The Journey

Written by Jordan Tyler

Scott Prosser and Suzanne Fling have been running Flingin Pots for the past 4+ years. It all began in a 1968 Comanche Camper. Initially, the company was completely mobile. They would ask friends and different businesses to host them. When the 2020 COVID-19 pandemic happened it shut the world off from each other. This made it impossible for the traveling pottery studio to continue. During the pandemic, everyone had a lot of time to watch The Great Pottery Throw Down. This sparked a lot of interest in pottery. People were excited to get back out and try something new. Flingin Pots took advantage of this opportunity and began offering classes in their basement studio. It started out just as a small experiment and now they run Flingin Pots out of their house full-time and work part-time teaching pottery for the City of Fort Collins. Flingin Pots has nowhere to go but up from here. They are bringing a creative outlet and the opportunity to learn a new skill to the people of Fort Collins. You can sign up for a class at: <https://www.flinginpots.com>

Creative Outlets

Scott Prosser is one half of the innovative Flingin Pots company. Together they are creating the ability to share the skill of pottery with the public and allow them to explore their creative nature.

The take-home gnome kits became very popular during the stay-at-home order during the COVID-19 pandemic. The take-home kits allowed people to connect through and experiment with pottery from within the safety of their homes.

Flingin Pots offers a variety of classes. This is the Raku class that they teach at the City of Fort Collins Pottery Studio. This is the only process that allows students to glaze and take home their pottery in the same day.

@Jordan.tyler.007

@Jordan_Tyler_02